Friday, November 30, 2010 I had a great comment in the blog. It was an awesome one. Can't seem to find the person now, but I have made a copy of it below. Basically, she made an awesome point. She said that it is not necessarily the value of the dollar that is important in the U.S. economy. Instead, she said, it was the perception of the value of the dollar, which is certainly connected to economic growth. It sounded like she was saying that there is more to the economy than the value of the dollar. She said that it is the belief that the country is headed in the right direction. The U.S. currently has the highest levels of unemployment, and that has translated into record public deficits. Clearly, the perception of the value of the dollar is faltering. Here is her comment: Being an old fat girl, I am biased. I think that "confidence" in our nation has declined. That's my opinion based on the economy, energy, oil, war, etc. One other thing. I feel that the return of the dollar in the future is just a matter of time. My question is this: If we return to a strong dollar, will we go back to the 1970's? I really don't want that. I want a united country that pays its bills, and the investor confidence that I mentioned brings in money. I was hoping to get your thoughts on this subject. If you have an opinion or additional information to provide, please do. Thank you, Pat A great comment indeed. It would be nice to know what "older fat girl" thinks. She could be me, for all I know. Fortunately, I don't feel her pain. I am a stock market, bond market, precious metals and energy market investor. And I am bullish about all of them. What about you? Friday, November 23, 2010 I could have gone out of my way to explain that something is going on, like I do with comments. But, what's the fun in that, when you can just tell your readers what it is that you want them to believe is going on. Once you know what to believe, guess what? You get to believe it. There are several things going on right now. Here are a few of them: 1. The U.S. Treasury has begun to issue new debt and to What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.4)?

Effect of a Clopidogrel Intervention on High Adverse Events in Patients Treated With Resection of Tumor from the Pancreas. We aimed to examine the effect of a Clopidogrel intervention (median treatment time: 19 days) on the Adverse Events (AEs) of patients treated with resection of tumor from the pancreas (PRTP). There were 216 patients evaluated in our study. In group I (n = 114), the PRTP was performed with normal use of Clopidogrel. In group II (n = 102), patients received Clopidogrel beginning on the day of the PRTP. The AEs recorded in both groups were divided into life-threatening (LTEs) and non-life-threatening (NLEs) events. Clopidogrel was used in a mean dose of 36.6 mg daily. The primary endpoint of this study was defined as the incidence of LTEs. All patients enrolled were followed for a mean of 52.4 ± 7.3 days. In group I, the incidence of LTEs was significantly lower than that in group II (13.8 % vs. 38.2 %; $P = 0.007$). The risk of experiencing LTEs was significantly lower in patients who received Clopidogrel (odds ratio (OR): 0.345; 95 % confidence interval (CI): 0.17-0.69). There was no statistical significance between the 2 groups with regard to other clinicopathological variables, including surgical morbidity, mortality and postoperative course. The initiation of Clopidogrel therapy on the day of PRTP can reduce the rate of postoperative AEs in patients undergoing resection of tumor from the pancreas. Geometric patterns in the brain: a review and a note on the clinical relevance of drug-induced torticollis. The clinical report emphasizes the significance of the findings concerning the post-injury (electrical) torticollis in this article and provides added support for the post-injury torticollis to be considered as a naturally occurring pathological alteration of the brain characterized by a heavy induction of specific short-term memory (i.e., the so-called "lightning bolt phenomena"). Finally, an adequate overall picture of the concept of the "power spectrum" in the brain is provided that represents a useful tool to help establish the identification of the seizure focus(s) in a given patient.
