Official announcement of the gift comes as federal agency reports 8.2 million visitors at parks since opening of new doors SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The National Park Service just announced that it has raised $253 million to preserve and protect the nation's 366 park units while creating or improving visitor services and facilities. The gift, announced Wednesday, will provide some $71.2 million to support the public-lands system and $111.2 million for the National Park Service. It's the largest ever given to the National Park Service. The money comes from charitable donations raised by the Service during its annual fundraising drive, including donations from individuals, corporations and government entities. Taken together, the gift will help preserve 6,554 square miles of land and waters for generations to enjoy. The parks say they will use the gift to fund a range of capital projects, including: — $7.8 million to restore the Charles Jones Visitor's Center at Fort Williams Park in the town of Charles Jones, Ky. The current center, built in 1929, was
