This article is more than 1 year old This article is more than 1 year old Hannah Roseman is a former elite rower who was born without a kidney and went on to claim gold at the 2016 Rio Olympics. Now the Canberra rower is joining elite rowing rival Ruby Rose who has raised over $100m for kidney disease and matched a kidney for a donor. Health and race day: Hannah Roseman and Ruby Rose form a strong partnership Read more "Who else is going to be better equipped to raise awareness for their issue than someone who has dealt with their own?" Roseman said. "Being able to see the same thing [being diagnosed with kidney disease] and your life crashing down is something that I'm incredibly passionate about." Roseman was diagnosed with a rare congenital kidney disease, medullary cystic kidney disease (MCKD), aged 12, which limited the size of her kidney and made it difficult for her to produce urine. The Olympic gold medallist was forced to turn to dialysis, until she was medically fit enough to have a transplant when she was aged 26. There are over 580,000 people in Australia on the kidney transplant waiting list, and only about 3,000 transplants are performed every year. After two years of dialysis, Roseman decided to transplant the kidney she received as a newborn and, after two years of training as a competitive rower, she won gold in the double sculls at the 2016 Olympics. The Sydney Roosters and New Zealand Warriors have already approached Roseman about matching the green kidney with another Sydney Roosters player, but it is yet to be finalised. Roseman said she was "speechless" when she discovered the plans to match her kidney with another person, and she had been with "myself and the Warriors in training this morning to get ready". "I'm going to do everything that I need to do in my life to ensure that I have the best to live a long and healthy life."/**
