Procarboxypeptidases (PAs) are a family of enzymes that hydrolyse C-terminal amino acids from peptides and proteins. They can exhibit both carboxypeptidase and endopeptidase activities and therefore they are responsible for the final steps of the degradation of peptide hormones. A recent breakthrough in the PA field was the identification and cloning of a large family of members of the PAs, whose genes are widely expressed in mammals and appear to have arisen from a single ancestral gene. Their discovery has led to the identification of new functions for PAs in modulating both haemostasis and inflammation. The recent discovery that certain PAs can act as angiogenic modulators at the vascular wall has broadened our understanding of the function of PAs and the importance of their role in blood clotting, angiogenesis, cancer and other diseases.
